An Unwarranted Insult.

The members of the Legislature who believe in the ballot, which represented the voter's unbought, conscientious franchise option—in elections free from bribery and corruption would of course vote for the bill. But they did not. They did not vote against it. They did not say no vote on the bill would tell how many men there were in the Legislature who believed in bribery and the perpetuation of all the infamous abuses which cursed our elections, and those who did old.

The above is an extract from an interview with Mr. William Looney, of Portland, and appears in several of the papers that are advocating the Australian ballot. We commend it to the attention of the members of the Legislature as a part of the interesting programme to come into being for this measure under the penalty of being denounced as opposed to an honest ballot. The suggestion of the idea that no man is honest unless he is in favor of the Australian ballot, is keeping with much that has been said on the subject by the advocates of the system, and shows how little importance attaches to their so-called arguments. These gentlemen will nod that they have undertaken more of a contract than they are able to carry out when they attempt to question the honesty and high character of the members of the Legislature who will work and vote against this bill.

The opponents of that measure are men whom no more upright and worthy representatives of the will of the people have ever occupied seats under the dome of the State House. There are thousand of men in this State who are opposed to this bill who were doing battle for the rights of the people before this youthful critic was born. If we may be permitted to use a strong phrase these tactics are too thin. Members of the Legislature are not to be bilked into voting for this measure. That its advocates have once more resorted to such low down methods would seem to indicate that they are getting desperate. They followed exactly the same course two years ago. Unable to present any substantial argument why the law should be changed, they finally sought to stampede the members by blacklisting those who oppose the new system. The effect of this insult or procedure is shown by the bullet to the House where the bill was killed by a vote of nearly three to one. Their arguments this year have been equally barren of facts. The law is not needed here because our elections are just as free and fair as the elections in Massachusetts where that law is in effect. The legislators understand this, hence the constantly increasing opposition to the bill.

Maine's Industries.

The Lewiston Journal has made a careful cauus of the industrial growth of Maine the past year and reports the following interesting facts: One hundred and forty-nine new manufacturing industries have been started and ninety-six old ones have enlarged. Over four million dollars have been invested in these new enterprises and over five thousand eight hundred additional shall are employed.

The two branches of industry that show the greatest progress this year are the ship yards and the pulp mills. Profitably the largest single enterprise of the year is the new iron ship building plant at Bath, but the business of building wooden vessels has been better than for years at a profit—equally well or even better for 1891. During the year four new ship building firms have begun work and nine old ones have enlarged. Over four million dollars have been invested in these new enterprises and over five thousand eight hundred additional shall are employed.

A Policy of Life Insurance.

"A policy, however, looks at it, is a valuable security and sound investment. Throughout the world, the life insurance companies are the largest holders of capital, and are not slow in investing it in the public welfare. They are the trustees of the public wealth, and their influence in determining the effect of a life policy will be regarded as one of the most beneficial and positive actions of life."

Second Despatch.

The Long Distance Telephone Company has no communication with New York today and that is being worked duplex for delayed business only. The Postal Telegraph Company on letter off, having no wire to New York. In New England there is a telephone connection with Boston and no further south than New Haven.
We shall get news what now we can have
of these discouraging circumstances if it's possible the situation may improve later.

Mr. Aldrich asked whether the Senator from Nevada and the Senator on the other side were prepared to fix any time for taking the vote.

He was told by the Senator that it would be impossible, until they had spoken, to fix any time for taking the vote.

Mr. Sanders then proceeded with his speech.

Mr. Sanders responded Democratic Senator that there was a difference between freedom debate and unlimited debate.
He declared that the election bill was a good measure, it might be better, than that would be simply postponing the question.

Referring to newspaper opposition to the election bill, Mr. Sanders said that he had no objection to it, but it was a tribune to express the popular will. The people themselves had, however, expressed with no uncertain sounds, the National platforms of the Republican party, and the speaker said that amounted to the constitution should stand as a bulwark and shield against all forms of oppression, no matter how humble the individual may be.

of the Stevens bill.

There are some patent medicines that are more marvelous than a dozen doctors' prescriptions, but they're not those that profess to cure everything.

Everybody, now and then, feels "run down," "played out." They're the will, but no power to generate vitality. They're not sick enough to call a doctor, but just too sick to be well. That's where the right kind of medicine comes in, and does for a dollar what the doctor wouldn't do for less than five or ten.

We put in our claim for Dr. Pierce's "Golden" Medical Discovery.

We claim it to be an unequalled remedy to purify the blood and invigorate the liver. We claim it to be lasting in its effects, creating an appetite, purifying the blood, and preventing Bilious, Typhoid and Malaria fevers if taken in time. The time to take it is when you first feel the signs of weariness and weakness. The time to take it, on general principles, is NOW.

All day long on guard the men had stood, rigid and motionless, to decline information from The Paladins until by evasive stabs they had rung the changes on Welsh's excellent family connections, his American blood, his patriotic motives in enlisting, his ardor for the flag and his fidelity to his oath, when he was ready to wish to heaven. The Paladins had shamed out anybody else to the point of official tyranny in the arm, and heartily sick of the part he had been induced to play.

But where, meantime, was Abramson? The day was by, and not once had he come to the garrison, and Welsh, smirking plotting up and down his mud-pool post office, was sure that every time the men looked at him or laughed each other in the rags they were giving him, had earnest desire to see his champion, and to prevent the publication of other letters they had projected, since the only effect, locally, of the assault upon the good name of his young officer was to bring him into the notice of a enlisted man in his regiment. It only made him rage the more spitefully against Abramson, and he longed for opportunity to vent his spleen.

When the devil is working in the human breast opportunity is seldom lacking. The evening gun had thundered the last note of the "retreat" had died away, and the sun, who had risen obscured all morning, went down in a golden radiance, leaving a sheen of beautiful color lingering along the crest of the opposite bluffs and reflected in myriad millions of rain drops still clinging to the tall clumps of buffalo grass. Tempted by the loveliness of the evening Mrs. Welsh had come out her husband had made after retreat roll call and Mr. Hearn was returning sadly to his own quarters. Lane headed him off:

"No, I'm going to take you away from Walla Walla and Martin to-night, and I don't mean to let old Kenyon get his hands on you again. Mrs. Lane and Miss Martin are here to go with us as far as we can, so there's no place like home."

And Hearn heard the captain's words.

Hearns had the same idea, and a dozen of the guard were seated about the rough stone porch of the gloomy old guard house as the carriage came rolling by, and at sight of the occupants they quickly laid aside their pipes and removably, and saluted with a hearty "Good-morning." The sentinel on No. 1, drawing sharply to the front, brought his rifle to the carry w/ a snap that made the buy-out ring. The one man who remained seated and staring blankly at the carriage with the cavalry uniform; it was Welsh.

The officers noticed the fact as they reached their cars in silence, and of the courtesy of the infantrymen and exchanged significant glances. The ladies, too, were quick to note what had happened, and they, too, looked at each other and then somewhat anxiously at Hearn. But the carriage whirled along. The instant it had passed Corp. Stein turned on Welsh. He did others of the guard a quiet little bit among ourselves."

And Hearn pressed the captain's hand and silently thanked him off.

Half a dozen of the guard were seated about the rough stone porch of the gloomy old guard house as the carriage came rolling by, and at sight of the occupants they quickly laid aside their pipes and removably, and saluted with a hearty "Good-morning." The sentinel on No. 1, drawing sharply to the front, brought his rifle to the carry w/ a snap that made the buy-out ring. The one man who remained seated and staring blankly at the carriage with the cavalry uniform; it was Welsh.

The ladies, too, were quick to note what had happened, and they, too, looked at each other and then somewhat anxiously at Hearn. But the carriage whirled along. The instant it had passed Corp. Stein turned on Welsh. He did others of the guard a quiet little bit among ourselves."

"What do you mean by sitting there like that?" was the demand.

"I know my business," was the reply. "Just you tend to yours. You'd better study tactics and regulations before you try to leave me anything."

"Oh, do you the high-spirited scion of our finest families alone, corporal?"

"It's not that I'm turning my stomach to civil-to-anybody," protested a tall infantryman.

"Ah, let me up on Mr. Welsh, ye Mulligan—that's what they called ye in the Twenty-third—wasn't it Mulligan? or was it Sullivan? Sure I know the family, and it's a fine one," protested Private Kelly, his blue eyes twinkling with a twinkle of mirth.

Welsh sprang furiously to his feet, clutching his fist and making straight for the laughing little "dough boy." That young Celt, though a head shorter than his dark antagonist, in a wise disconcerted, stood squarely facing him, and awaited the attack with a grin of genuine delight on his freckled face. Stein sprang forward, however, and intervened.

"No fighting here," he ordered. "Wait till you're off guard in the morning and settle it then."

"Don't thwart the general, corporal. Here comes his friend the police reporter," laughed the group of guardsmen. But the unusual clatter had summoned the officer of the guard to the post, and in a flash of lightning every infantryman in the platoon was in instantaneous expression of paternalistic innocence. Mr. Abrams too had reared up in front of the trader's store, a few yards away, and noting the little knot of soldiers peering across the road division of time that separated them, went on and so, with the instinct of his profession, hastened to the scene in time to catch a part of the gallantry that ensued.

"The corporal tells me the trouble grew out of your refusing to rise and salute when Capt. Lane passed," said the officer of the guard, addressing the stolid trooper.

Welsh glared furiously over his shoulder, and the Paladins man was in range of his voice, and then loudly replied:

"I'm a member of the guard, sir, and the regulations forbid guards paying compliments of any kind after 'retreat,' and I can show you the paragraph."

You know perfectly well, Welsh, that that is not the case, especially when under arms and not individual members. I want no hair splitting here. See to it that you pay proper courtesy to every officer while you're under my command." And the lieutenant, a young infantryman, with decidedly resolute face, looked squarely into the glowering blue eyes of the trooper and then, turning to the chief of the platoon, his eye lighted on The Paladins man. For an instant it looked as though he had something to say to him, too, but struck by a sudden thought he passed in without another word, and presently the sergeant of the guard appeared in the doorway. There was evident purpose in his coming.

Half an hour later Welsh was standing some twenty yards away, engaged in low toned, eager chat with his civilian friend. The faces of both men were clouded; and every little while the guy looking soldier shot an angry glance toward the guard house door. Presently they moved across the road, and headed for the open arbor at the trader's, wherein the last words of the conversation gleamed. Before they reached the open portals Corp. Stein was at their heels, and his stern voice ordered Welsh to halt.

"Go back to the guard house, Welsh; it's against orders for a member of the guard to leave it, and you know it as well as I do."

"Myself, I don't go on post for two hours now, and the gentleman has business with me. You'd better not interfere with him."

"The gentleman can see you over there. You can't see him here."

Already the sergeant was striding across the road; the lieutenant appeared at the door; a dozen members of the guard were eagerly watching the scene.

"We'll have to wait a half hour, and I'm afraid I'll be late for my appointment with Mrs. Frankham," freely answers before of inquiry. Endless stamping for reply.
